

A new CDC-supported study conducted over multiple flu seasons shows that getting a flu shot lessened the risk of severe influenza among adults, including reducing the risk of hospitalization and admission to the intensive care unit (ICU), and also lessened the severity of illness. CDC recommends an annual flu vaccine for everyone 6 months and older. Annual flu vaccination varies in how well it works, but it is the best available way to prevent flu and its potentially serious consequences.

- Flu vaccination among adults reduced the risk of being admitted to the hospital with flu and placed in a general ward bed by 32%.
- Flu vaccination was even more effective in preventing the most severe forms of flu and reduced the risk of being admitted to an ICU with flu by 82%.

And because some people who are vaccinated still get sick, the study also looked at the question of whether a flu vaccine reduces illness severity in those people and found that, yes, flu vaccination did reduce severity and duration of flu illness. Visit the CDC influenza site to learn more about the study.

The CDC recommends flu vaccination for anyone  $\geq 6$  months of age. Those who should not be vaccinated against the flu are: Anyone with a previous allergic reaction to a flu vaccine, anyone with an allergy to any of the flu vaccine components and anyone  $< 6$  months of age.
